THE GAZETTE.

FRIDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 8, 1858.

In 1543 it appears that such a thing as a steam vessel was known in Spain. This is a fact not widely circulated. At that date a Spaniard exhibited in the presence of Charles V. and all his court, in the barbor of Barcelona, a vessel of 200 tons, propelled by an engine, the construction of which was a secret to all but the inventor. The chronicles of that day inform us that there was a great cauldron of boiling water within, and two wheels on the outside which moved the vessel. The treasurer of the kingdom objected to its introduction. It seems to have been quite perfect, since the objections urged against it were that it was too complicated, very expensive, and the boiler apt to explode. But Spain was not ripe for it; the world was not ripe for it. The inventor, disgusted with the want of appreciation displayed by the court, took the engine out of the vessel, allowed the ship to rot in the arsenal, and his secret perished with him in his grave.

One century later and the same problem was offered to France. A celebrated female equally renowned for her beauty, immoralities misfortunes and longevity also, for she died at the age of 134 years-the famous Marie de l'Orme, so well known to the readers of modero fiction-bas furnished us, in a IN BAGS AND BARRELS. A VERY EXletter to an admirer, written in 1641, these most astonishing details. The celebrated Marquis of Worcester was then on a visit to Madame in Paris, and with her visited a madhouse in the capital. While crossing the court-yard of that dismal establishment the Organic matter, yielding ammonia...... 14.55 lady was almost paralyzed with terror, and Water. 8.55 while clinging to her companion she saw a Phosphate of Lime. 60.88 window of a building, and heard these strange | Sand and other insoluble matter 15.92 words: "I am not mad! I am not mad! I have made a discovery which shall earich the kingdom that adopts it." The question was asked by one of the visiters, what is it that this man has discovered? The answer to the visiter, with a mocking laugh, was, "Oh, it's not much; it's something about the power of steam." And so the lady laughed that a man should go mad about so frivolous a thing as that.

This man, it seems, came from Normandy to bring before the king his discovery of the fact that steam could be used to navigate the ocean, and in short there was nothing that he did not claim could be done by the power of steam. Cardinal Richelieu was uppermost then, and though he was most sagacious and enlightened as world wisdom goes, yet he turned his back on the inventor. The man followed him from place to place, and the Cardinal, getting tired of his pertinacity, sent him to the mad-house. The man even wrote a book on the subject of his thoughts, entitled Moving Powers. The Marquis of Worcester was much interested in this book and used some of its ideas afterwards in his own works. So we see that France in 1641, as Spain in 1543, proved her inability to take up and wield this mortal thunderbolt.

The problem was reserved for the Anglo-Saxon race to grapple with and conquer, and thereafter the mechanical skill of England was turned to this invention with various success, till in the middle of the last century, after the idea had been floating for 200 years in ingenious minds, the steam engine, that scarcely inanimate Titan, that living, burning mechanism, was brought to perfection by James Watt. Thenceforth the engines of labor, marshalled by the power which Watt brought forward, were to make their bloodless triumph, not for the destruction but for the blessing of mankind. All hail to thee, mute, indefatigable agent of strength, working in deep mines, moving along the pathways of trade, toiling in the service of man! No fatigue can palsy thy hereulean arm! No trampled bosts writhe under thy feet! No widowed hearts bleed at thy beneficent vic-

England solved the problem, but it seems as if it were the will of Providence that she should not go so far as to apply steam to the navigation of the ocean. This part of the problem remained for the other branch of the Anglo Saxon race-the branch of that Western Hemisphere whose expanded territories are traversed by some of the noblest rivers, and separated from England by an almost world-wide ocean. The thoughts of the men of the last century after the Revolution, were turned to the development of steam. One of those men attracted the attention of him whom nothing escaped that belonged to the welfare of his country-of Washington-and be expressed his satisfaction at the experiments of Rumsey. It seens almost providential that steam was not invented in ocean navigation at the time of the Revolution, for it would have given her vast resources and powers to bear more swiftly and directly on the strugling colonists, with what effect no one can

But the Revolutionary period was passed. and independence established, the hour had come and the man was there. In the year 1799, the thought became mature in Fulton's mind, and Chancellor Livingston took a deep interest in the scheme of water navigation by steam. They applied to the New York Legislature for an act of incorporation. I am sorry to say that America at as a permanent Fertilizer. that time did not seem much wiser than FOR SALE IN LARGE OR SMALL QUAN-France and Spain had been before her .-Livingston tells us that the young men of the Legislature, when tired of the graver matters of the law, would call up the steam bill, as they called it, and have a little fun. Young America did not on that occasion show himself much wiser than than his seniors. But, nothing discouraged, Fulton and his coadjutors persevered, and twenty years had not passed away before steam was found on our sounds, lakes, and great rivers, and that at a time when it was known only by bearsay in Europe. This was all that was needed then. Twenty years more clapsed before English capital was first applied to the navigation of the ocean itself by steamwhich America little needed, but which England desired as giving to her access to the Western world .- Edward Everett's Speech
